Appendix I An outline reconstruction of B-Ca

The following list is an epitome of the surviving portions of the B text for Cambridgeshire combined with a reconstruction of the missing portions. By and large it agrees with the listing given by Hart (1974, pp. 47–67). All the way through, the paragraphs are equated with the corresponding paragraphs of DB-Ca, as they were numbered by Rumble (1981); the identifications of the places named are all taken straight from that edition. A very few entries seem to have been lost somewhere along the line between B and DB (i.e. in C, D or DB): the notation ‘10/—’ means that a matching paragraph ought to occur, but apparently does not occur, in DB’s chapter 10. Square brackets denote those manors belonging to the king which were omitted or cancelled from B (paras. 1/1–8, presumably also 1/9). Bold type distinguishes the entries which are represented in xEl, sometimes in a form which agrees word for word with B, but sometimes only in the form of an excerpt, more or less heavily edited. Of the fifteen hundreds in Cambridgeshire, the monks of Ely had some interest in every one except Whittlesford.

Stretches of text that are missing from V are printed in italics. Bold type continues to denote the entries represented in xEl; plain italics denote the entries that are only to be found in DB. The reconstruction is based on the evidence of these two texts, xEl and DB, and is, at best, only as reliable as they are. In some parts and in some respects it is fairly solid; in other parts, in other respects, it is not. I explain very briefly how the reconstruction was put together, so that readers can judge for themselves how far it is to be trusted.

(1) The order of the first thirteen hundreds is known from V. As for the last two, it is clear from xEl, and from chapters 5 and 9 in DB, that Chesterton should come before Ely.

(2) Within a given hundred, the order of the villages is reconstructable so far as it is vouched for either by entries in xEl or by strings of entries in single chapters of DB. For Ely hundred, where the monks of Ely owned almost everything (and were interested in knowing about the rest), xEl supplies all the answers. For Northstow hundred, where sheriff Picot happened to own part of every village, DB’s chapter 32 contains as much information as is needed. That leaves three hundreds which are not so easy to deal with: Longstow (of which the beginning survives), Papworth (of which the end survives), and Chesterton. In all three, the evidence is too sparse to fix the order satisfactorily.

If we are willing to resort to numerical arguments of the kind developed by Round (1895), we can advance a little further. Round himself worked things out for Longstow hundred (1895, p. 48), and the reconstruction below is based on his; but in fact there is more than one way of arranging these villages so that they fall into blocks of 25 hides, and Round’s way is (as far as I can see) not demonstrably the right way.<sup>1</sup> If Round’s arrangement is accepted, the order of the villages is fixed (within one block by chapter 26, within the other block by chapter 25, between blocks by chapter 14), except that Eltisley cannot be ordered with respect to Croxton.<sup>2</sup>

The same sort of argument works well on Chesterton hundred, which can be shown to consist of four blocks of 30 hides each (Hart 1974, p. 66). Chesterton itself, belonging to the king, makes one block of 30 hides; presumably it ought to come first, but there is no proof of that (and Hart preferred to put it last). Cottenham adds up to 26 hides – the abbot of Ely has 10 (para. 5/42), the abbot of Crowland has 11 (para. 9/1), one of Picot’s men has 5 (para. 32/40) – and these combine with the 4 hides in Westwick to make a block of 30; Cottenham comes before Westwick on the evidence of chapter 32. Drayton and Childerley, 20 and 10 hides respectively, combine to make another block of 30; Drayton comes before Childerley on the evidence of chapter 41. Histon adds up to another block of 30 hides;<sup>3</sup> it comes after the Cottenham–Westwick block on the evidence of chapter 5, before the Drayton–Childerley block on the evidence of chapter 3.

Papworth hundred is the most difficult case, and numerology does not seem to help.<sup>4</sup> DB’s chapter 23 fixes the order for five of the missing villages: Papworth, Elsworth, Conington, Boxworth, Swavesey. Except for Swavesey, this sequence is confirmed by chapter 26. Graveley belongs before Elsworth, on the evidence of chapter 7, but cannot be ordered with respect to Papworth; Knapwell belongs between Elsworth and Boxworth, on the evidence of the same chapter, but cannot be ordered with respect to Conington. To complicate things further, there is also one stray hide here (para. 41/11).

<sup>3</sup> The discrepancy reported here by Hart was of his own making: he was misreading the fraction 2/3 as 3/4.

(3) Within a given village, the order of the manors is reconstructable so far as it is vouched for either by entries in xEl or (but this does not happen often) by strings of entries in single chapters of DB. Except in Ely hundred, the evidence is generally inadequate. In Oakington, for instance, five manors are listed. Three of them are mentioned in xEl, and for these three the order is fixed. But the other two are mentioned only in DB, in different chapters, and these two manors cannot be ordered with respect to one another, nor with respect to the first three. This means that there are  $5!/3! = 20$  ways of ordering these five entries, and we have no means of knowing which is the right one. I list the entries missing from xEl at the end of the line, in the sequence in which they occur in DB; but this, in relation to B, is an arbitrary order, and nothing can be done to improve it.

After Ely hundred, xEl continues with some excerpts from a survey of the town of Cambridge, distantly parallel with DB-Ca-189ra, and concludes with a single sentence which seems to derive from some statement of the profits accruing to the king as king (rather than as the owner of certain manors) from the county in question.<sup>5</sup> DB has a statement of this kind for some counties, but not for Cambridgeshire.

Appendix II Summaries compiled in the Treasury

The statistical summaries discussed in chapter 9 (above, pp. 103–6) were first put into print by Ellis (1816). For the benefit of readers who do not have easy access to a copy of that edition, I print the two relevant stretches of text again, by permission of the Dean and Chapter of Exeter and the Master and Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge, respectively.

Editorial interference has been kept to a minimum. The first document, written by scribe mu, can answer for itself. The second, surviving as a later copy made by a scribe at Ely, is not in such good shape. I have marked two significant omissions, one in the middle of paragraph 3 and the other at the end of paragraph 12.<sup>6</sup> But what will catch the eye most is the fact that in many places (and not just in the paragraphs

<sup>6</sup> The omission in para. 3 was caused by a jump car' ... car'. In U a corrector has added this passage in the margin: xxx (uill') lx (b) v (s) h'nes x carr'. (There is no note of this in Hamilton's edition.) At first sight this seems to prove that the omission originated in T, and that the corrector had access to a better copy (such as T's exemplar) from which he could supply the missing words. But does it really prove that? These look to me like imaginary numbers, too round to be genuine. The corrector, I think, found himself in a quandary. He could see, just as we can, that there was something missing here, and did not want to let the text be copied in this defective form. But he had no way of mending it unless he resorted to directly of interest to Ely) alternative readings are given for the number of manors belonging to a certain category. The scribe writes a number, cancels it, and writes another number above it. Though I cannot explain this, I have two comments to make. (1) It is, I think, quite clear that these are not corrections originating with scribe T1: he was reproducing what he found in his exemplar (and probably it puzzled him as much as it puzzles us). (2) One of the alternative readings, usually the second one, is a dummy number, x or xxx or iiii. Though scribe T1 regarded these as numerals, I would guess that they were originally something else – cancellations made with either criss-cross or vertical lines. The question to be asked, then, is why it was decided that these numbers should be cancelled.

guesswork – unless he made up some plausible numbers of his own. In the end he did not quite commit himself. He wrote this passage in the margin; but he did not go so far as to mark up the text, telling the copyist where it should be inserted. As things turned out, the fair copy of xE1 was never made, perhaps because the same sort of quandary occurred too often. The text was in bad shape; there was no proper way of repairing it; so was there any point in making a fair copy? Scribe U3 did not think so; nor did the scribe of HE1/W.
