Hugo son of Fulco, with the assent of his wife and sons, grants to the monks his land in Southgate which is next to their granary, for a rent of 12 pence.

De terra ubi pistrinum est (scribe D1)

Ego Hugo filius Fulconis assensu uxoris meae Emmae, et filiorum meorum Fulconis et aliorum, concessi deo et sancto Andreae et monachis eius terram meam de Sutgate quae est iuxta horreum eorum, solidam et quietam pro xii denariis unoquoque anno in festiuitate sancti Michaelis pro ipsa terra michi uel ministro meo repetenti reddendis. /a Testibus /b Heruiso archidiacono, /c et Albano et Warnerio monachis Cantuariensis, et Hunfrido et Roberto et Ricardo Rofensis, et Osmundo et Letardo Ernulfii episcopi seruientibus, et Willelmo coco et Huberto nostris hominibus, et Gosfrido de Clouilla et Simone filio /d Aluffi, et multis aliis.

Fulco of Newnham remits to the monks the rent of 12 pence which they used to pay him for the land in Southgate enclosed by their wall, next to their vineyard, where their bakehouse is situated. He also grants them the land of Bleccchemere, free of any rent.

Item de eadem (scribe D1)

Fulco de Niueham, omnibus fidelibus dei, salutem. Sciatis me remisisse monachis sancti Andree apostoli Roffensis ecclesie in perpetuum duodecim denarios quos michi solebant reddere annuatim ad /a festiuitatem sancti Michaelis de terra de /b Sudgate que muro illorum inclusa est, iuxta uineam suam, ubi et pistrinum eorum positum est. Another charter of Fulco of Newnham's, granting Norton church to the monks of Rochester (Domitian, fo. 134r; Thorpe 1769, p. 507) was confirmed by archbishop Teobald in 1150×61 (Saltman 1956, p. 452).

The place called Bleccchemere was, we are told, in Burdifeld (Boardfield TQ 9352); around 1220 it was held by Henric de Cobeham, for a rent of 10 shillings payable to the cellarer (Vespasian, fos. 95v, 98r).

Helias son of Hamo grants to the monks (1) all the land which was his father's and his in Crow Lane, with the house-sites belonging to that land, held from the manor of Borstal, saving the right of the bishop, (2) the land which was his father's and his held of the manor of Chatham, saving the right of the lord of the manor, and (3) the house-site which was his father's and his in Rochester, saving the right of the court of Frindsbury. The monks have made certain undertakings in return.

De terra Helye filii Hamonis Kenstani (scribe D1)

Notum omnibus tam posteris quam presentibus esse uolo, et hac carta mea confirmo, quod ego Helyas filius Hamonis concessi et dedi cum filio meo Alexandro, Roff' ecclesie et conuentui in perpetuam elemosinam, pro anima mea et pro animabus antecessorum meorum, totam terram que fuit patris mei et mea in /a Crawelane cum masagiis eidem terre pertinentibus de tenura de /b Borctalle, saluo ubique iure domni episcopi, et totam similiter terram que fuit patris mei et mea /c de tenura de /d Cetham, saluo iure domini fundi illius, pariter et masagium quod fuit patris mei et meum in Roucestria, scilicet duas hages simul ubi mansit pater meus, saluo iure curie de Frendesberia. The name uiuet is troublesome. Unless it was carefully written, it is difficult to decipher. Thorpe was inclined to read it as 'uniet'. In the rental I find it spelt 'Vyuet'; so I am fairly sure that 'uiuet' is right. But the etymology escapes me.

Ernulf of Chelsfield to Ascelin bishop of Rochester, Radulf the castellan, all the citizens of Rochester and the whole hundred of Shamel. Letting them know that he, his wife and his sons have allowed the gift made to the monks of Rochester by Ernulf of Strood when his son became a monk, namely the land called Pinindene and the land elsewhere called Godricesdune.

(scribe V)

The place called Pinindene or Piuindene was in Strood – more precisely, in the part of Strood belonging to the hundred of Rochester – but was held from the manor of Chelsfield. I cannot locate Godricesdune, though this document seems to imply that it was somewhere in the hundred of Shamel. Around 1220, the land at Pinindene was on lease to a man named Johan Parlebien, who paid the sacrist a rent of 14 shillings (Vespasian, fos. 92r–4r); perhaps that covered Godricesdune as well, which is not mentioned separately in the rental.

Roger of Strood and Aliza his wife confirm to the monks the land which was given to them by Ernulf of Strood when his son became a monk. The monks are to supply Aliza with a one-pound candle on the Purification of Saint Mary, and the pair of them with an allowance of drink and food on six named feast-days.

Henric de Sornes was still alive late in 1202 (Pipe roll 4 John, shortly after that.

There is nothing sinister about the omission of a whole sentence from the copy in Domitian: that clause had been nullified by the following document.

Willelm son of Roger of Strood remits to the monks the rent which they used to pay for the land they hold from him in Strood. A charter of the monks guaranteeing that payment has been lost: otherwise it would have been surrendered to the monks.

Thomas son of Scotland of Nashenden grants to the monks the land in Dartford which used to be Ordmer Buthel's. He also confirms to them the land in Sheppey called Heacheland and the house-site in the city of Rochester which he granted to them when his son became a monk.

Date: probably c. 1170–80

In Domitian this is followed by an earlier charter (fos. 148v–9r, not printed by Thorpe) relating to the land in Sheppey. In that charter Thomas speaks of his son becoming a monk; but he does not mention the property in Rochester. There seems to be some obscurity surrounding Thomas's donations. I cannot find any items in the rental corresponding to the land in Sheppey mentioned here, nor to the land in Dartford.

Scotland of Nashenden confirms to the monks the donations made to them by his father Thomas of Nashenden: the land in Dartford which used to be Ordmer Buthel's, the land in Sheppey called Heacheland, and the house-site in Rochester which was held by Adam son of Hurthoc.

The scribe had difficulty fitting this quantity of text into the available space; so it seems likely that something has been interpolated (presumably the sentence Sunt ... The land at Sipmannedene was, we are told, eventually lost to the monks 'through the negligence of the people in charge': que terra per neglegentiam prelatorum amissa est (Vespasian, fo. 84v).

Fawkham was one of the bishop's manors, held by a family which took their surname from it. Godefrid de Falcheham, presumably the same man named here as Waleran's father, occurs in a twelfth-century list of the bishop's knights (Privilegia, fo. 217r, added by a later hand); Robert de Faukeham occurs in 1212 (Red Book of the Exchequer, ed. Hall 1896, p. 474); Willelm de Faukeham occurs in 1243 (Book of fees, pp. 669, 682). Waleran may have been the unnamed father whose property had been recently inherited by Robert de Faukeham in 1205 (Pipe roll 7 John, p. 117); or he may have belonged to an earlier generation.

Master Hamo grants to the monks some land of his in the city of Rochester, adjoined by Helias's land towards the east; but he is to retain a portion of it during his lifetime, because it is part of his orchard. In return, the monks have promised him a daily allowance of food and drink, on the same terms as Thomas of Nashenden or Willelm Turc.

Walter dean and master Hamo, at the request of prior A(lvred) and the convent, give permission for the party-wall, half of which stands on their land, to be covered by a roof. Whenever Walter or Hamo or their heirs decide to build a stone house with a tiled roof on the adjoining house-site, they are to be allowed to uncover this wall, so that beams and corbels can be set in place; the cost of the guttering is to be shared between them and the monks' tenant.

Prior Willelm was in office from 1215×18 till 1222×5.

The place called Tornindon' here – Thorninduna in Privilegia (fo. 221v) – was part of the manor of Frindsbury. It seems to have been in the neighbourhood of Chattenden (TQ 7572): in Vespasian we find the name Torindun' glossed by a later hand uel Chetindon' (fo. 66v). Presumably heriscon is French heriçon, meaning 'hedgehog'.

An agreement between bishop Benedict and the prior and convent of Rochester. The prior and convent have been accustomed to receive each year a seam of eels (or the cash equivalent) from the bishop's men of Freckenham and half a mark from Robert son of Willelm of Isleham. These are to be paid to the bishop from now on. In exchange, the bishop remits the mark previously paid to him from Haddenham by the sacrist, and the rents totalling 10 shillings 4 pence previously paid to him by the monks for the lands they hold from the bishop in Rochester and its suburb and Borstal; he also grants to the prior and convent rents totalling 10 shillings to be paid to them from several house-sites situated between Eastgate and the property of Henric son of Pagan and from one house-site on the south side of the city.

I print the five names omitted from Domitian as they were printed by Thorpe; they ought to be checked against Reg. temp., but I have not had an opportunity to do that.

Presumably the 'year of grace' would begin on 25 March; since Benedict was consecrated on 22 February 1215 (Vespasian, fo. 32v), his eighth year would end in February 1223.

The sum that was paid to the cellarer, before this agreement took effect, in lieu of the eels from Freckenham, was 27 shillings (Vespasian, fo. 97v); so the exchange was perfectly balanced.

Henric de Cobbeham grants to the monks (1) rents amounting to 20 shillings to be paid to them by the heirs of Peter de Camera for the land which was Robert Cok's in Cheldegate Lane, (2) 2 shillings to be paid to them by Godefroid cook for a house-site in Rochester at Doddingherne, next to the sacrist's land towards the east, and (3) rents amounting to 8 shillings to be paid to them by Walter Dereman for the land which was Johan mason's. After his death, on his anniversary each year, the monks are to distribute 20 shillings' worth of bread to the poor, and to provide supplies for their refectory to the value of 10 shillings; while he lives, they are to do the same on the Assumption of Saint Mary (15 August).

Thomas de Nessendene was still alive in 1219 (Pipe roll 3 Henry III, p. 150) but was hanged for homicide a year or two after that. Johan de Saint Johan was in possession by 1221 (Pipe roll 5 Henry III, p. 205). He died in 1229 (Close rolls 1227–31, p. 270).

For the details of this donation, Johan refers to Thomas's charter, which does not survive. But the witnesses' names go to prove that the land was in Rochester.
